

Housing outcomes overview: France

The provision of efficient, sustainable and inclusive housing is crucial for the well-being of citizens. Housing markets affect people's well-being through a wide range of channels including access to decent shelter, environmental quality, efficient use of scarce resources, type and extent of commuting or its contribution to strong and resilient economic growth. Galloping urbanisation coupled with increasing awareness for negative externalities arising from commuting and urban sprawl have put strain on housing markets and their capacity to deliver affordable housing to all while reducing environmental and health costs for current and future generations.
